case study

As Taylor Wimpey sales staff are often alone with clients on viewings the company were keen to investigate the most suitable way to protect their lone workers.

One of their directors was tasked with carrying out a feasibility study on the use of alarms for lone worker protection.

Deciding between fixed alarms or mobile devices it was decided that a personal alarm would offer greater protection as it can be worn outside the office and moved from site to site.

With the decision made to use individual lone worker safety devices Taylor Wimpey considered a full range of options. After much consideration they decided to trial safety devices from lone worker safety experts Peoplesafe.

The safety device that best suited the individual needs of Taylor Wimpey was the Identicom.

The Identicom device, which can be worn around the neck on a lanyard like a standard ID, enables the wearer to discreetly raise an alarm if threatened and also allows a third party to listen to what is happening and coordinate emergency support if required.

The device can also be used to discreetly alert Peoplesafe lone worker safety experts, who can make digital recordings of incidents of verbal abuse, which can then be used to secure convictions.

This feature is particularly useful as verbal abuse offenders often feel they are immune from legal prosecution because mobile phones can't be relied upon to capture evidence of abuse.

Taylor Wimpey can now access expert support from Peoplesafe including the 24/7 monitoring service, 365 days a year.

It was this commitment to delivering innovative products and services, expert support, and robust and reliable technology solutions that led to Peoplesafe being recognised in the National Business Awards.
